A CRISIS OF TRUST

Americans think their distrust of the federal government and each other is a problem that gets in the way of solving issues.

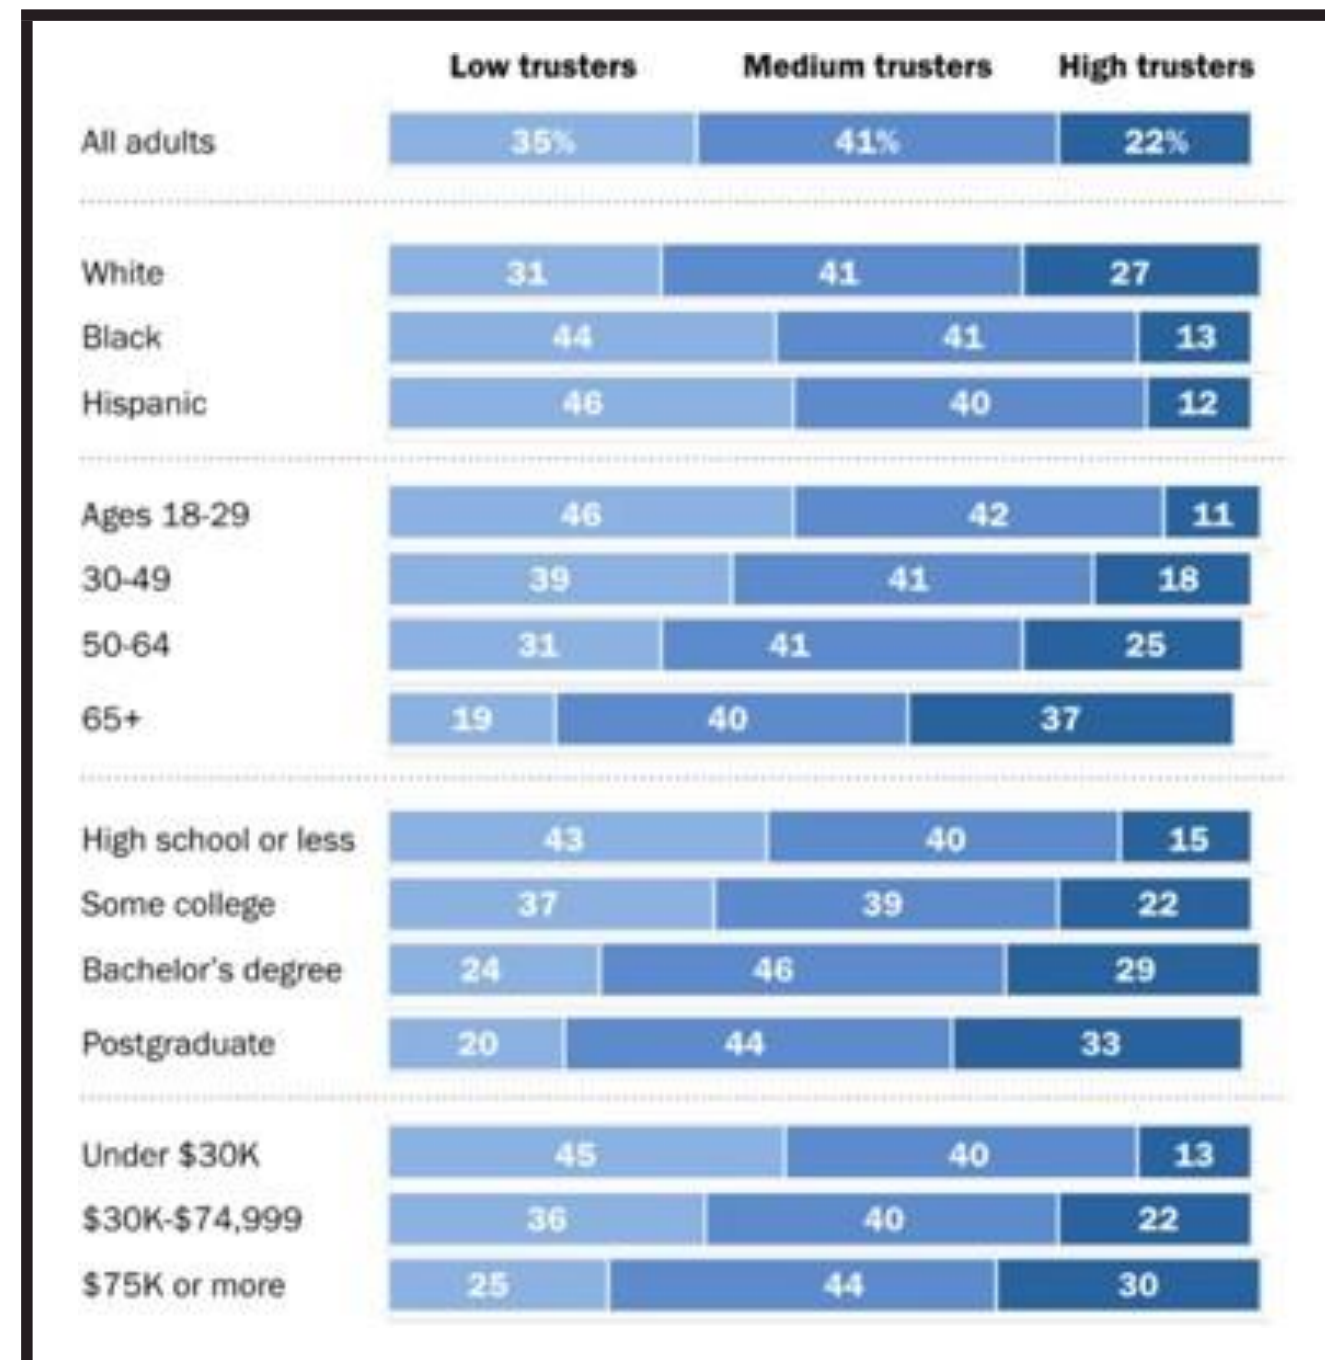

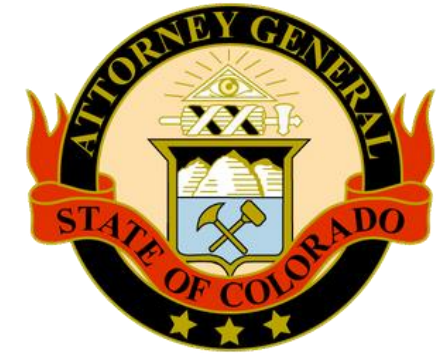

Personal trust ranges across a spectrum, with differences in levels of trust tied to race and ethnicity, age, education, and household income.

Percentage of U.S. adults who fall into different trust groups.

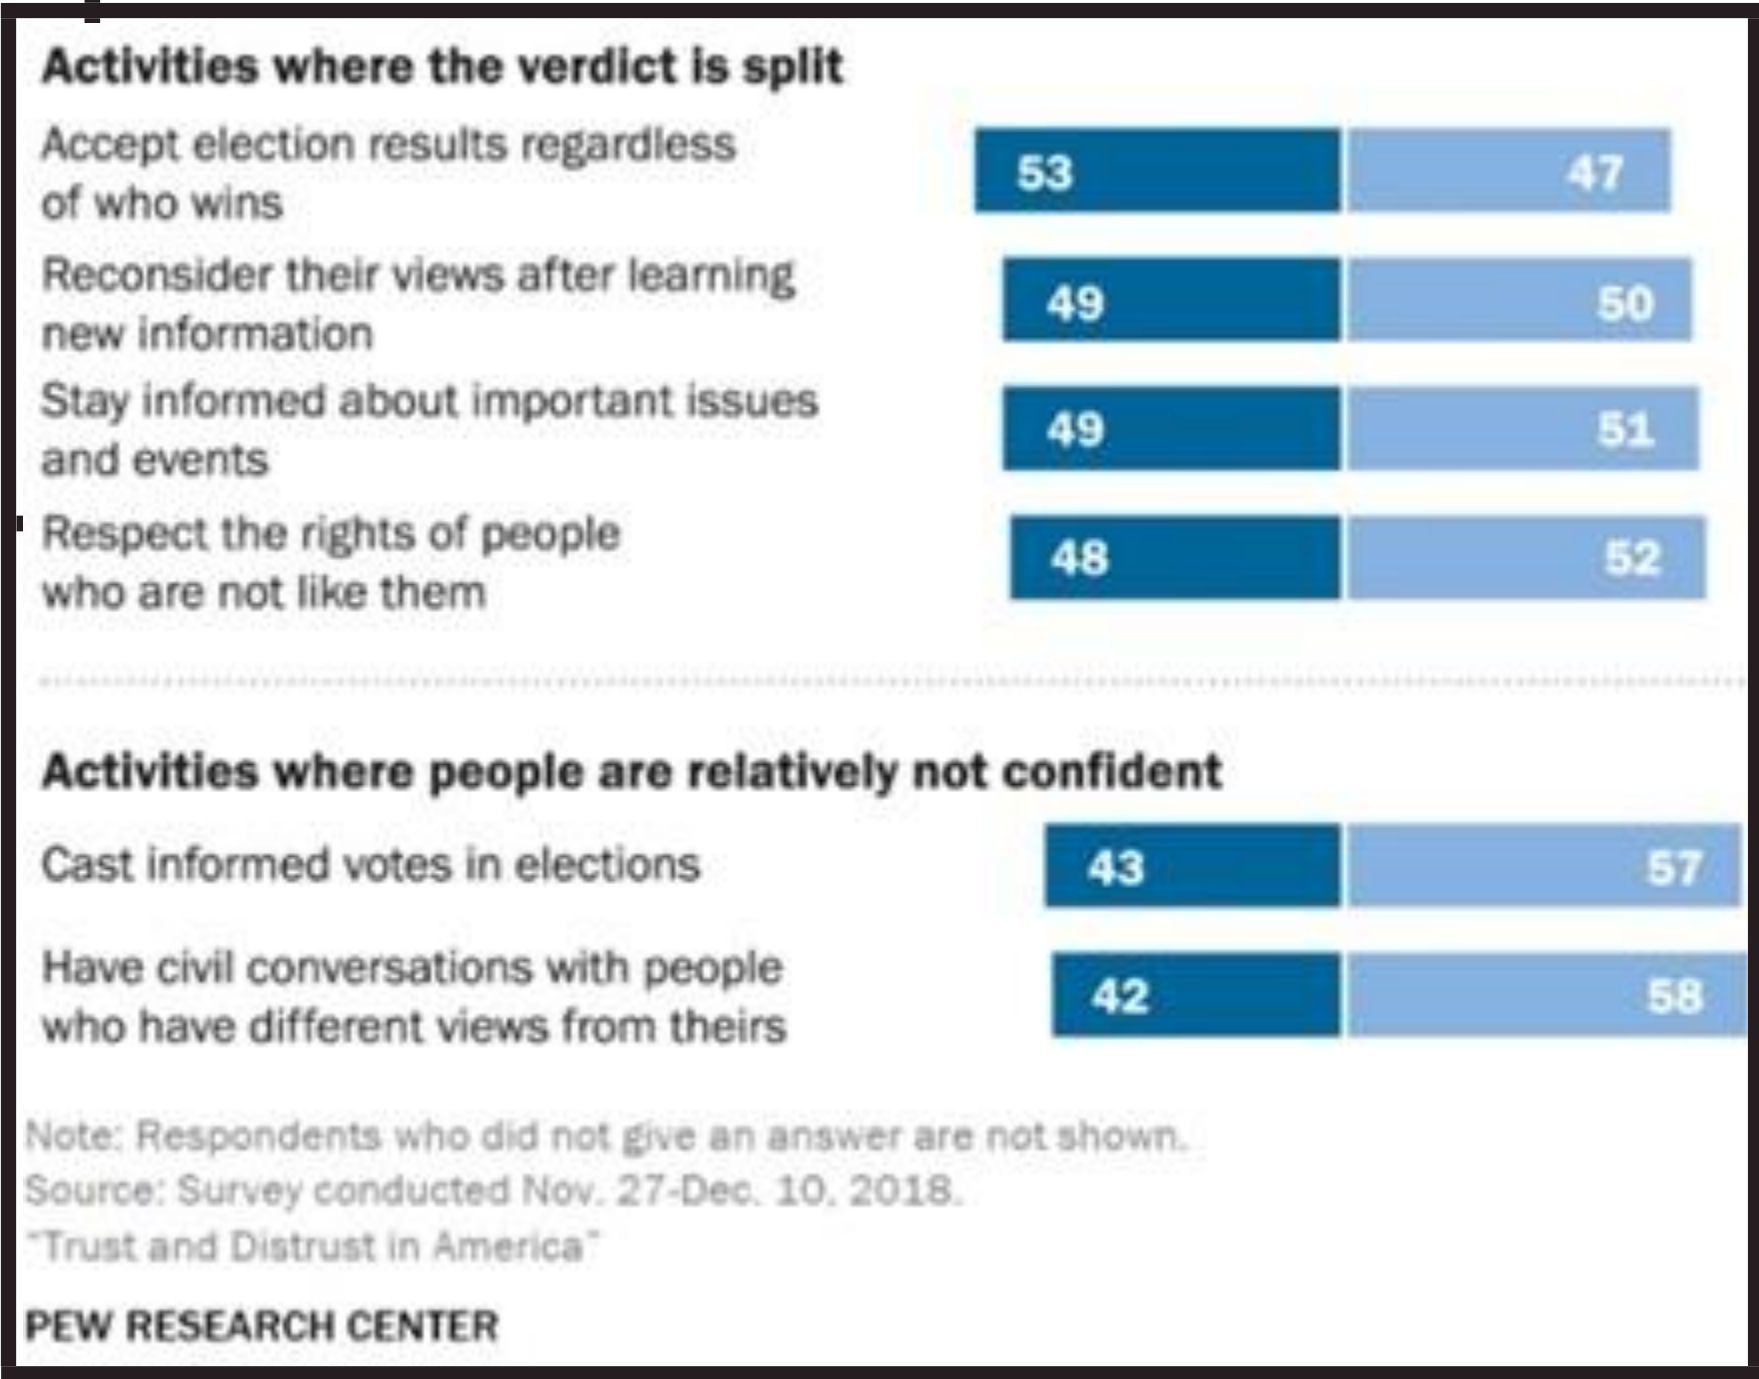

Those with high personal trust have higher confidence in key leadership groups.

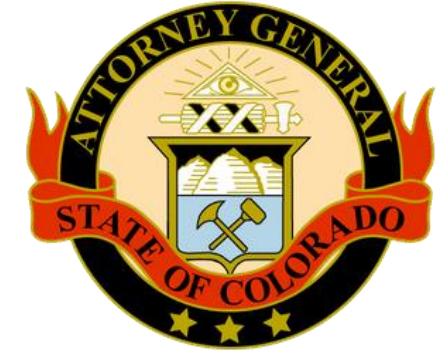

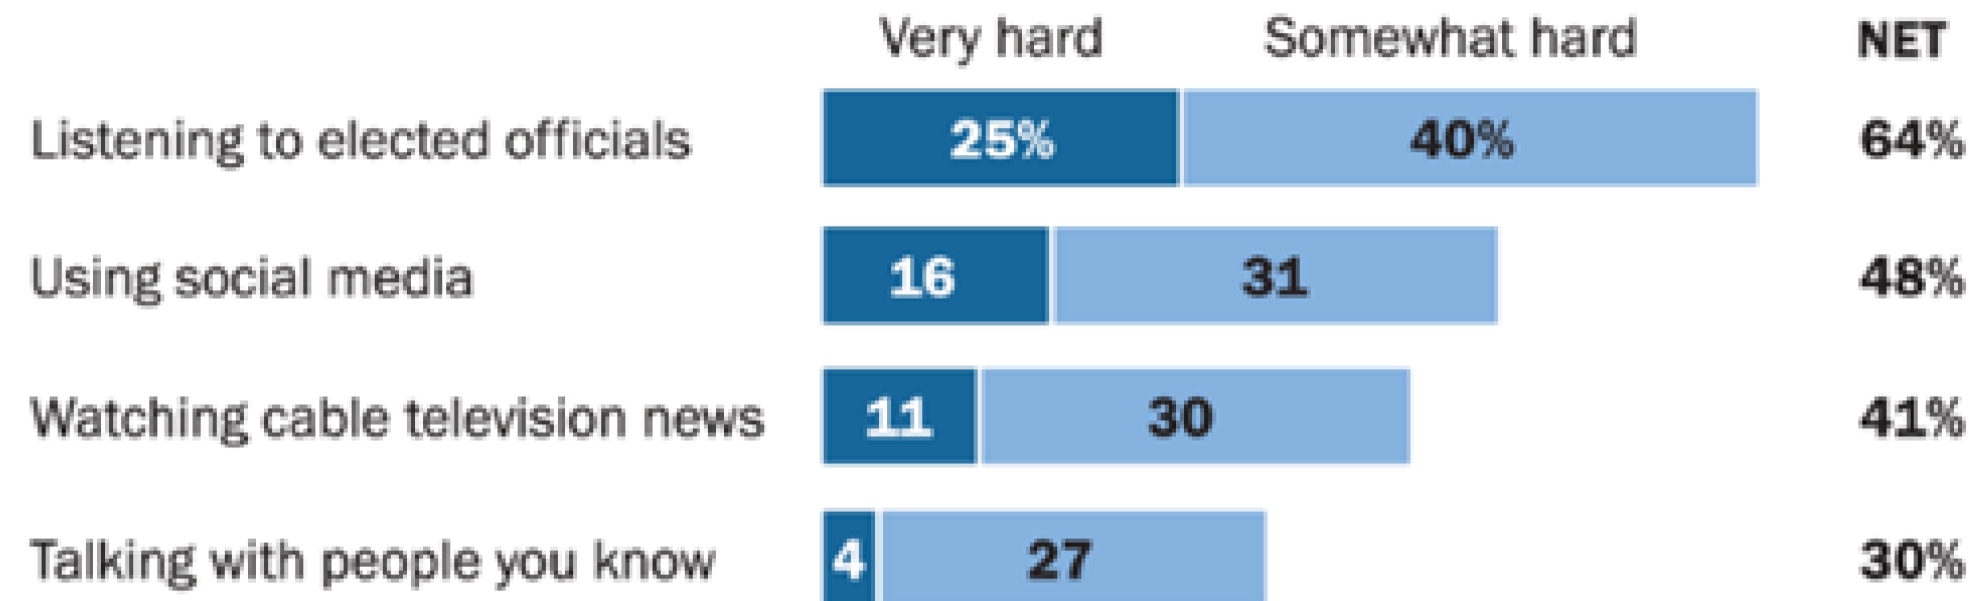

Many Americans have confidence in others to do the right thing in civic life at all times, but not always.

Nearly two-thirds of adults find it hard to tell what's true when elected officials speak.

COVID-19: THE IMPACT

In the face of COVID19, we are witnessing a call and hunger for unity in the face of the crisis.

“The pandemic has been a massive humanizing force — allowing us to see each other on a level much deeper than politics — see the fragility, the fear and the courage.” David Brooks, N.Y. Times.

Americans are hungry for responses to the crisis guided by ingenuity, resilience, and grace.

A poll by More in Common and YouGov in late March found that:

90 percent of Americans feel “we are all in this together,” and 82 percent believe “we have more in common than what divides us”

—numbers that have grown substantially over the last year within every shade of partisan belief. More Americans believe they can count on one another and report greater worries about the “American people’s health” than about the health of their own families.
