A patient arrived after sustaining a life-ending gunshot wound. The outreach worker was present when the person came in, but there was no family present and the opportunity for involvement was limited due to the circumstance. About a month later, the patient's wife came to the emergency room with symptoms that resembled anxiety and depression which was related to the grief from the death of her husband. Her symptoms were treated in the ED and the social worker provided mental health resources in the community. In addition, the social worker reached out to the AIM administration directly requesting assistance.
